Analysis

The market opened with high market expectations of higher for longer policy rate by the Fed, which dented market sentiment. The US labor market strengthened again after the release of US non-farm payrolls data in January, which was recorded higher to 353K, above market expectations of 180K. Data on the US unemployment rate, which is expected to increase to 3.80%, turned out to remain stable growth at the level of 3.70%. Latest US inflation data reinforced the hawkish view as January 2024 reported 0.3% MoM/3.1% YoY headline inflation, and 0.4% MoM/3.9% YoY core inflation, above market expectation. However, FOMC minutes expressed more balanced view by the Fed officials regarding their cautious stance in lowering interest rates while at the same time maintaining efforts to tighten monetary policy in controlling inflation.
