Analysis

Indonesian equities ended September on a strong note. The Jakarta Composite Index (JCI) gained about 2.9% over the month, closing near 8,125 and even hitting a record intraday high of 8,168 on September 24. This performance brought the index's year-to-date gain to roughly +14%. Indonesia's market was in line with global trends – U.S. stocks also rallied (the S&P 500 jumped +3.5% in September) amid optimism around peaking interest rates. Mid- and small-cap stocks outperformed blue chips during the month. The LQ45 index of large-cap shares edged down -0.4% in September, even as the broader IDX80 index rose +2.0%. Growth-oriented sectors like technology, communication services, and healthcare led the market, whereas consumer staples, materials, and energy lagged. Notably, the sharp Rupiah depreciation (to around Rp16,700 per USD) provided a boost to export-driven and commodity stocks. Gold-related mining shares jumped as global gold prices hit a new record high near US$3,759/oz in late September.
