Analysis

Global factors contributed to the volatility during the month. Oil price slide and weak China economic data created negative sentiments among investors, and led to corrections of emerging market assets. On the other hand, unclear pattern of recovery also created speculation on the pace of Fed rate hike. (source: Schroders)

Analysis

Global market continued to focus on growth recovery and interest rate direction. After UK referendum decision to exit the EU, global growth concern resurfaced and markets expect less aggressive pace on US interest rate hike. Global yields decreased and it brought positive impacts to emerging markets including Indonesian government bonds. The 10-year Indonesian government bond yield decreased from 3.63% to 3.31% in July 2016. (source: Schroders)

Analysis

The Fed rate direction remained a major factor influencing the global emerging market last month. A comment from Fed indicated that a move to hike the interest rate is up for discussion at the next Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting in September 2016. USD-denominated government bond was more stable. The 10-year Indonesian sovereign bond due 2026 yield remained at 3.3% during August. (source: Schroders)

Analysis

The US treasury bond market fell due to expectation that higher inflation should trigger rate hike faster than expected. Global bond markets became the worst asset performer as yields surged in just a couple of weeks post the election. European and Japanese bond markets have retreated from negative yields, while most emerging bond markets have erased capital gains they earned in the third quarter. (source: Schroders)

Analysis

The Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting finally agreed to hike interest rate by 25bps, nevertheless it has been widely expected hence the reaction was rather calm. The Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting finally agreed to hike interest rate by 25bps, nevertheless it has been widely expected hence the reaction was rather calm. Foreign investor in the local bond market will remain calm as long as yield differential remains wide to cover currency fluctuations. (source: Schroders)
